Two Washington Mayors Honor General Aviation in Their Cities

In February, two Washington mayors have declared “General Aviation Appreciation Month” in their cities. In the City of Bingen, Mayor Betty Barnes recognized general aviation’s critical contributions to the success of Bingen’s local businesses and the livelihood of its citizens. “The City of Bingen invites all citizens to recognize this occasion,” the proclamation concludes. In the City of Oroville, Mayor Chuck Spieth noted in his proclamation that within a 25 mile radius of Oroville, “general aviation has a local economic impact of over $3.2 million.”
