Houston (July 20, 2009) – Universal Weather and Aviation, Inc. announced today that the official financial close of Universal’s deal to become the majority owner of Brazilian flight support services provider Cavok Servicos Auxiliares de Transportes Aereos Ltda. (CAVOK) has been finalized.

CAVOK was founded by Mauro Camargo in 2000 and provides Brazilian operators flight support services such as flight planning and obtaining permits, as well as arranging handling, fuel, hotels and more.

“The completion of this partnership is a significant milestone for Universal® and part of our long-term international growth strategy,” said Scott Moore, Director, Trip Support Services International, Universal®. “Brazil is home of the largest corporate aviation base in South America and one of the fastest-growing business aviation markets in the world. CAVOK is a well-respected local company, with an existing and loyal client base.”

“I am excited about the benefits of this partnership for our clients,” said Camargo. “By partnering with Universal® and having access to Universal’s global resources, we can meet the growing demand of our client base while still providing the same outstanding services we have become known for. Our clients can still rely on our local expertise, but now also have access to Universal’s full range of services, such as Trip Support Services, the UVair® Fuel Program, Universal Aviation<sup>sm</sup>, and online trip planning tools. Moving forward, we will continue to maximize the strengths of both companies to find additional benefits for our clients.”
